

John A. Rogener | CFR

John A. Rogener has 30 years of global experience as a certified executive coach and talent development professional. He has coached individuals, groups and teams enabling them to make changes that boost their leadership effectiveness; increase employee engagement and increase business results in this ever-changing business landscape.

John is a certified practitioner of assessments, including DiSC, Myers Briggs and Coaching Mindset Index (CMI).

As an adjunct professor at New York University for 14 years, he was granted their prestigious Award for Teaching Excellence. He coauthored an article entitled, “Address Learning Needs, Not Wants” for CLO Magazine and has presented at professional organizations on topics such as: Management and Leadership Development, Communication Styles and Communicating Across Diverse Cultures

Through Rutgers University New Start Career Network, he volunteers time coaching individuals who are long term unemployed and is a recognized honoree for the New Jersey Governor's Jefferson Award for Public Service to support individuals finding employment.

He received his executive coaching certification from New York University. He has an MA/ Advanced Graduate Studies in Rehabilitation Counseling from Assumption College and a BA from Marist College.